

1. Higher Additional Buyers' Stamp Duty (ABSD) rates

ABSD rates for first property purchase by Singapore Citizens and Permanent Residents will remain unchanged at 0% and 5% respectively.

| Type of buyers | Rates from 6 July 2018 to 15 Dec 2021 | Rates on or after 16 Dec 2021 |
|---------------------|--|-------------------------------|
| Singapore Citizens | Buying first residential property | 0% (No Change) |
| | Buying second residential property | 17% (Revised *) |
| | Buying third and subsequent residential property | 25% (Revised *) |
| Permanent Residents | Buying first residential property | 5% (No Change) |
| | Buying second residential property | 25% (Revised *) |
| | Buying third and subsequent residential property | 30% (Revised *) |
| Foreigners | Buying any residential property | 30% (Revised *) |
| Entities | Buying any residential property | 35% ¹ (Revised *) |

¹ (Plus additional 5% for Housing Developers* (non-remittable))
² (Plus additional 5% for Housing Developers* (non-remittable))

Buying a Property Soon? Here's how You Can (Legally) Get Around the Latest Cooling Measures

Description

The Singapore government has announced its latest round of cooling measures for the property market. Here's a quick summary, and how you can (legally) get around them.

What are the latest changes?

1. Higher ABSD (Additional Buyers' Stamp Duty)

If you're a Singaporean/PR buying your first property, you don't have to panic because there's no change for you.

default watermark

1. Higher Additional Buyers' Stamp Duty (ABSD) rates

ABSD rates for first property purchase by Singapore Citizens and Permanent Residents will remain unchanged at 0% and 5% respectively.

| Type of buyers | | Rates from 6 July 2018 to 15 Dec 2021 | Rates on or after 16 Dec 2021 |
|---------------------|--|---|--|
| Singapore Citizens | Buying first residential property | 0% | 0% (No Change) |
| | Buying second residential property | 12% | 17% (Revised ↑) |
| | Buying third and subsequent residential property | 15% | 25% (Revised ↑) |
| Permanent Residents | Buying first residential property | 5% | 5% (No Change) |
| | Buying second residential property | 15% | 25% (Revised ↑) |
| | Buying third and subsequent residential property | 15% | 30% (Revised ↑) |
| Foreigners | Buying any residential property | 20% | 30% (Revised ↑) |
| Entities | Buying any residential property | 25% ¹ (Plus additional 5% for Housing Developers ² (non-remittable) ³) | 35% ¹ (Revised ↑) (Plus additional 5% for Housing Developers ² (non-remittable) ³) |

However, if you're purchasing your second property, you will now have to pay higher taxes i.e. an increase of 5% for Singaporeans and 10% for PRs.

For foreigners and corporations buying residential property, they will now also have to pay 10% more in ABSD.

With the ABSD raised to 35% for housing developers, this now adds pressure to developers to complete and sell all units within the 5-year deadline. In the mid to longer term, it is also expected to slow down the sharp increase in land acquisition prices and tame the en bloc market.

2. Lower TDSR (Total Debt Servicing Ratio)

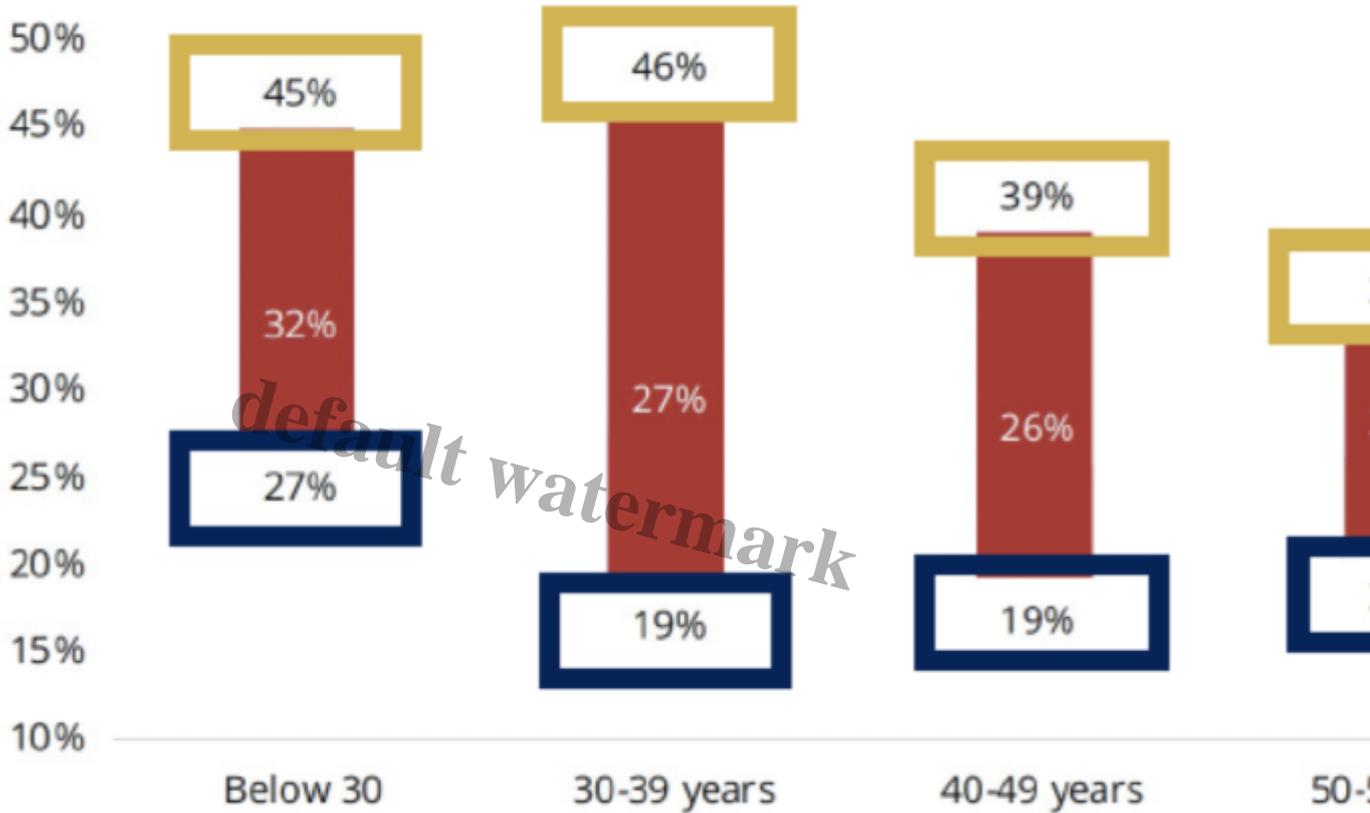

The TDSR has been reduced by 5%, which I do not see as a major change. In fact, this is even better as it will make buyers at the fringe think twice about leveraging too close to the limit, and exercise prudent buying in the immediate and long run.

But in fact, according to DBS, the current mortgage-to-income ratio is still relatively healthy and below the maximum threshold:

Figure 23. Mortgage-to-income ratios, by age and income

Mortgage-to-income ratio by age group

As a finance writer, I must also tell you to be prudent with your debt anyway. If you were hovering near the 60% TDSR limit prior to these changes, then you should definitely relook your debt commitments and see what you can pare down or eliminate. Because the last thing you’d want is to find yourself in a situation where you’re now struggling to repay your monthly debt obligations due to a higher-than-expected interest rate increase!

Also, remember that TDSR consists of more than just your mortgage – it also includes other debt obligations such as your car loan, credit cards, etc.

And for self-employed personnel or those operating a sole proprietorship, any debt commitments by your company – such as working capital loans or hire-purchases – will count towards your TDSR as well.

3. Reduced LTV (Loan-to-Value) limit for HDB loans

If you intend to take a HDB loan, bear in mind that you will now need to pay a higher deposit (5%) since the LTV limit has been reduced.

3. Reduced Loan-to-Value (LTV) limit for HDB- granted loans from 90% to 85%

Reduces the maximum amount potential homebuyers can borrow from HDB.

LTV limit for loans obtained from financial institutions to purchase
HDB flats remains unchanged at 75%

The infographic is divided into two vertical panels. The left panel, titled 'Old Policy', has a dark blue background and contains the text '10% Downpayment' and '90% Loan' in white. The right panel, titled 'New Policy', has a dark blue background and contains the text '1' and '8' in yellow, with 'Dow' and '8' in white below them. Two red arrows point from the left panel to the right panel. A watermark 'default watermark' is visible across the center. At the bottom, the source is cited as 'Source: go.gov.sg/cooling'.

Old Policy

10%
Downpayment

90%
Loan

New Policy

1
Dow

8

Source: go.gov.sg/cooling

To be honest, this shouldn't be too big of an issue, and I'll elaborate on why in the next section where I talk about solutions.

There is no change to LTV for those on a bank loan.

Who's affected?

As you can see, the latest curbs are mainly targeted at individuals who are buyers purchasing a second (or third) home for investment, as well as foreigners purchasing private property, rather than residents seeking to purchase a place to live in.

default watermark

default watermark

Affected Groups

It also targets buyers who are at the fringe i.e. servicing debts that run too close to the TDSR limit. This group is the most vulnerable to interest rate hikes, which are likely to come next year (as guided for by the Fed) and will drive debt repayment obligations upward.

Companies and housing developers are also affected.

How to (legally) avoid paying ABSD

But before you fret, don't worry because there are ways where you can still structure your property ownership so that you still have multiple properties in your household.

While tax evasion is illegal, tax avoidance is not. But those who are ignorant will continue paying taxes because they didn't know of alternative ways to structure their purchases such that they can pay less taxes.

Important Disclaimer: This is for information only and not a recommendation from me. The information presented here is for reference and educational purposes only. I do not represent nor speak on behalf of any government agencies or statutory bodies, and definitely not for HDB, IRAS, CEA, URA, MND, etc, which is why you cannot take my words as a legal confirmation in any way. It is best that you engage a professional or get any confirmation that you want. I do NOT advocate breaking of any laws in Singapore when you're buying property, but I'm a firm believer that you should be educated on the prevailing policies.

1. Decouple and buy under individual names

If you don't already know, many couples are using this method to skirt around ABSD requirements. Just look at the most common purchase profile for several new launches recently:

MORI– Purchase Profile

- Single Name 75%
- Multiple Names 11%
- Trust 11%
- Foreigner 3%

Jervois Mansion – Purchase Profile

- Single Name 59%
- Multiple Names 19%
- Trust 19%
- Foreigner 3%

Canninghill

- Single Name
- Multiple
- Trust
- Foreigner

Data from Senior Research Director Lee Sze Teck of Huttons

This is how it is usually executed:

- buy the first property under one spouse's name
- buy the second (private) property under the other spouse's name

Psst, if your first property is a HDB, you can do this by listing the other party as an occupier. Drawbacks include not being able to draw on the occupier's CPF nor income for loan eligibility, and the occupier will not have any legal ownership in the property either (but still be subject to fulfilling MOP). Note that this ownership structuring has to be done upfront and comes with several considerations – you can Google and read about the pros and cons if you're exploring the feasibility of this option for yourself.

Many Singaporean couples who have managed to buy a cheap BTO from the government typically go on to sell it for a profit after completing their MOP (Minimum Occupation Period). After using the sales proceeds to pay off any outstanding mortgage and accrued interest, they are likely to still have spare cash leftover. Combined with their CPF, they can now use the money to pay for the downpayment of two properties.

The most common method for this would then be to live in one of the two properties, while renting out the other at a monthly rental amount higher than your mortgage obligation. For instance, you could buy a bigger apartment for your family's needs, while renting out the 1 or 2-bedder to an expat who's here for work.

That way, you're living in a property that has potential for capital appreciation (especially if you bought an undervalued private property) in the long run, while servicing the second mortgage easily (subject to rentability) thanks to your tenant's payments.

2. Buy under a 99-1 split

Another method would be to buy under a 99-1 ownership scheme, which will result in the stamp duties being payable only on the 1% that is transferred (or sold to the 99% owner) later on. The savings on stamp duty here can easily be 5-digits or above, compared to paying on a 50% split being transferred.

The 1% owner can now be freed up to buy another property without having to incur high stamp duties on a second property purchase.

This method is fairly common in the private property market.

3. Buy under trust

This method is not readily accessible to everyone, as it requires full cash payment without a loan or CPF usage, which is why it remains as a method used typically used by wealthier buyers often with parents buying under trust for their children.

Don't believe me? Here's one recent example:

Crypto billionaire Zhu Su in ea buying S$49m GCB as trustee

Zhu and wife recently granted option to buy Yarwood property as trustee for child

🕒 FRI, DEC 17, 2021 - 2:20 PM | UPDATED FRI, DEC 17, 2021 - 6:11 PM

If your child is below 21 years old, you can set up a property trust for them and buy a property with you as the Trustee.

Since you are not considered the beneficial owner of the property, this will not add to your property count, which means you do not have to pay any ABSD on this purchase.

If A purchases a residential property to be held on trust for the beneficial owner B, ABSD is charged based on the profile of the beneficial owner, B. IRAS

Another downside of this method is that if you were to sell the property later (also before the child turns 21), the monies will have to go back into the Trust account. Of course, if you're smart enough, there are perfectly legal ways to withdraw the money legally, but that will require another article to elaborate in detail.

Note that based on prevailing laws (Section 51 of the Housing Development Act), you cannot buy a HDB under trust.

Am I buying a HDB soon. Will the changes affect me?

If you're a first-time home buyer, the latest measures will probably not affect you much, especially since you can benefit from grants of up to S$160,000.

While you will need to pay a higher downpayment of 15% now (due to the reduced LTV), this is still not a big issue when you factor in the HDB grants that you can still get from the government.

For instance, if you're buying a 4-room resale HDB to live near your parents, you can qualify for a $50,000 Family Housing Grant and $30,000 Proximity Grant.

This is less than the $75,000 downpayment (15%) on a $500,000 HDB.

Your only problem will be if you buy overpriced HDBs, such as a million-dollar HDB, for instance, which will require you to cough up $150,000 as downpayment. But of course, one could easily argue that if you're even considering buying a million-dollar HDB in the first place, then money should be the least of your concerns.

I own a HDB and am planning to upgrade to private. Will the changes affect me?

If you've completed your MOP and intend to keep your HDB while buying a private property, you will now have to pay ABSD at the new level of 17%.

Assuming you're buying a $800k condo, that will mean paying $136,000 in stamp duty. Why the heck would you want to do that?!

You'll be better off selling your HDB first.

Of course, this may not be so if your HDB is currently under the owner-occupier scheme. In this case, the spouse who's the occupier can now go on to buy a private property under their name without incurring ABSD.

I'm selling my HDB and am planning to upgrade to private. Will the changes affect me

No, as long as you complete the sale of your HDB before you buy your private property.

I own a private and am planning to buy a second one for investment. Will the changes affect me?

Yes, obviously. You fall within the groups that the latest measures are targeting.

In this case, you can explore which of the methods above to avoid ABSD can work for you. Otherwise, you may want to rethink your plans and perhaps go for commercial, industry or even overseas properties instead if you really want to buy one for investment. Why limit yourself to just residential properties when they now incur so much tax?

I've waiting to buy a private property. Will prices come down?

To be honest, I doubt residential property prices will come down.

Property remains an extremely resilient asset class in Singapore, especially if you look at the transaction trends over the past decades.

And given that most of the transactions today are backed by wealth rather than just income, I feel it is also unrealistic if you expect property prices to come down significantly. You might end up waiting and waiting until your hairs turn white.

Why are they implementing these cooling measures now?

Here's what the Ministry of National Development has officially said:

If left unchecked, prices could run ahead of economic fundamentals, and raise the risk of a destabilising correction later on. Borrowers would also be vulnerable to a possible rise in interest rates in the coming years.

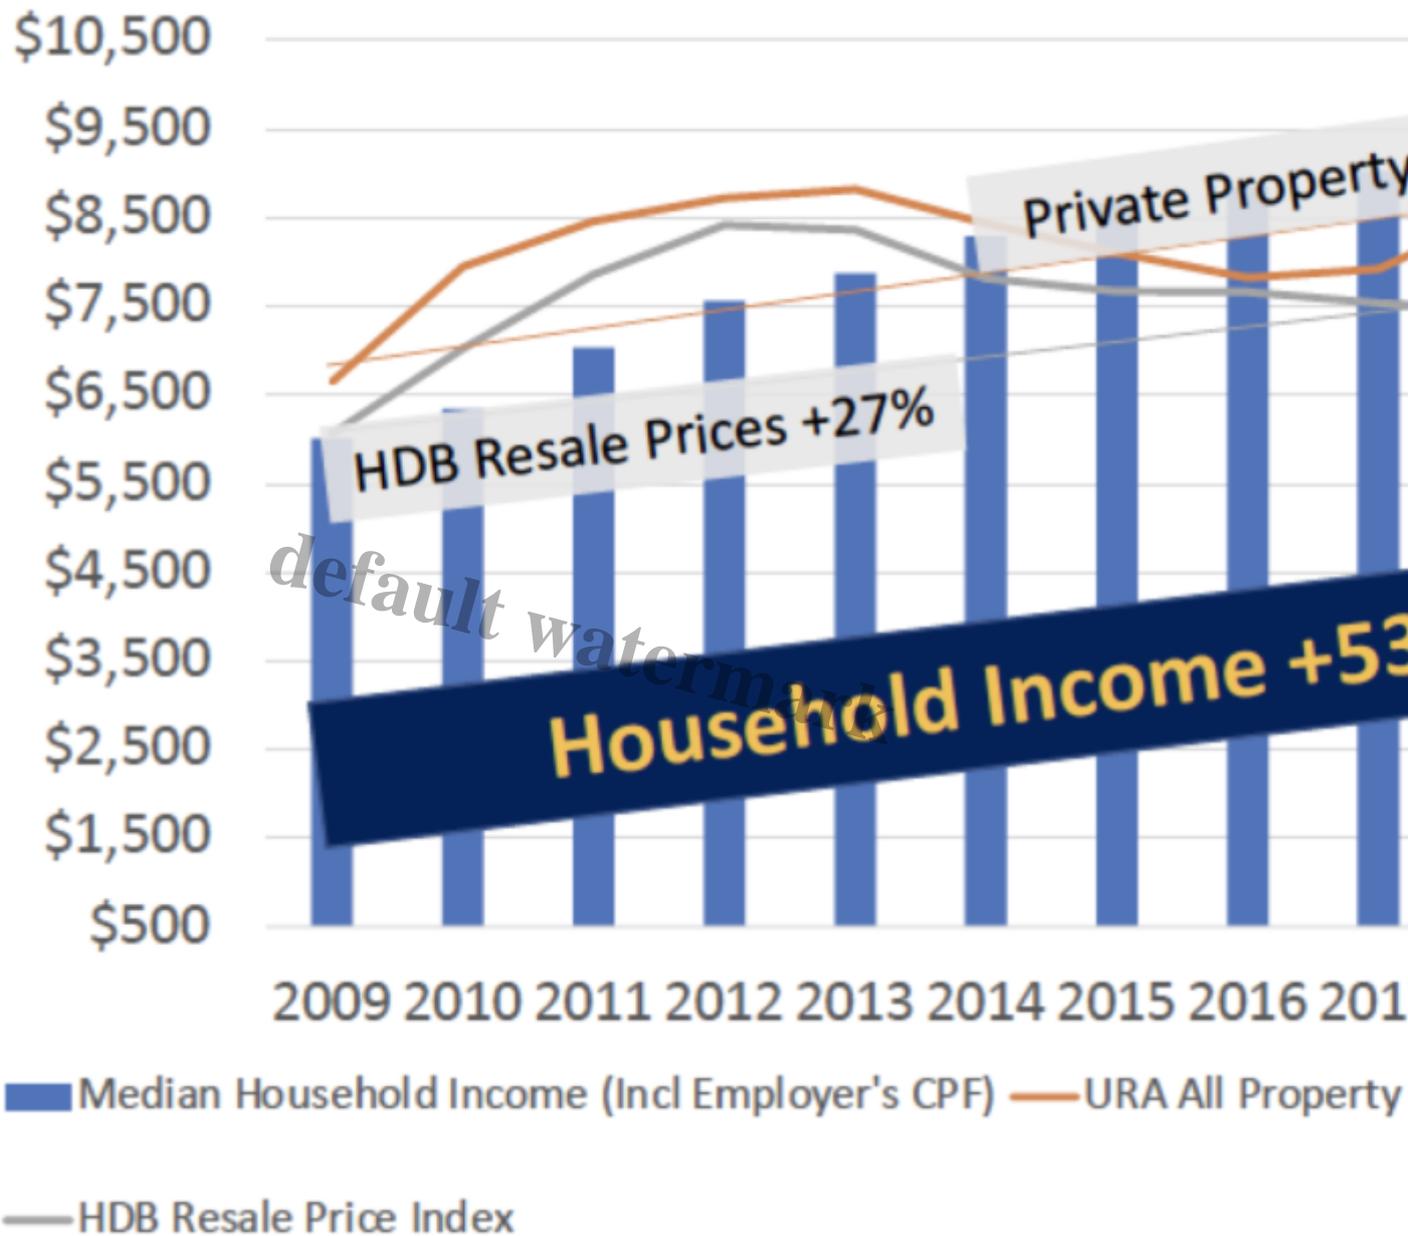

The Government has therefore decided to implement a set of measures to cool the private and public housing markets, to promote continued housing affordability.

Now, given that locals make up the majority of buyers, I doubt these cooling measures are unlikely to have a long-term impact.

ABSD is a wealth tax, so it will affect the wealthier buyers rather than the mass-market home purchasers. If you fall into the latter group, you really don't have to be too worried.

More importantly, the data shows that household income is still rising faster than property prices. And as a buyer, you should always make sure that you're not over-stretching your finances when you purchase a property (or multiple properties) anyway.

default watermark

Credits: Data provided by Senior Research Director of Huttons, Lee Sze Teck

All in all, these measures aren't surprising considering how our government has been hinting at it for some time now. And given that the world is expecting multiple interest rate hikes next year, the TDSR changes are definitely prudent.

As for foreigners, even with the increased taxes, Singapore still remains an attractive place for them to invest (and safe, compared to other regional peers).

If anything, our government's decision to act at this time reaffirms that our property market is going up, up and up. These cooling measures will only serve as a temporary stop-gap measure to slow the rate of increase, rather than depressing prices for the long run.

So will property prices come down as a result of these measures?

I doubt so.

Huge thanks to my husband and property expert Nicholas Huang for assisting me with the data that I needed for this article.

P.S. For those of you who are still unsure about your next property move after this round of measures, my husband has agreed to help any of my readers who don't have a trusted advisor to guide them along.

He's willing to spare no more than 30 minutes of his time to review any plans that you have for the next 1 - 3 years. You can DM me on Instagram if you need help, so I can link you guys up.

With love,
Budget Babe

Category

1. Property

default watermark